UPTONS AND BRYANT TO BE TRIED AT KINGSTON

Erwood Upton and Sherwood Upton, who are now serving a four-year sentence in Portsmouth penitentiary, and Frederick Bryant, who is in jail awaiting trial on the charge of murdering Constable Beard, of Napanee, on the morning of August 28th last, for shooting of Constable Cotter, and taking part in general robberies, will appear at the sittings of the County Court, which opens at the court house, Kingston, on Tuesday, June 13th, at 2 p.m., to answer to some of the charges against them. J. L. Whiting, K.C., who is conducting the prosecution, does not state definitely what the charges will be, but it is understood that the three young men will be charged with shooting Detective James Connor, and that Bryant may be charged with breaking into Mahood's fancy store. It will be remembered that when the Upton brothers were charged with breaking into Mahood's store they pleaded guilty, but would not implicate Bryant.

Bryant, who has been confined to the county jail in Kingston for five months, under a special guard, has been a model prisoner. It is thought that if he is found guilty on any of the charges the judge when sentencing him will take into consideration the time that he has been confined to jail.

The Upton brothers, who pleaded guilty on the charge of manslaughter, are still waiting sentence on this charge. It is not likely that Justice Riddell will announce his sentence until all the other charges are disposed of. It is not yet known whether Bryant will be tried on the charge of murder at this sitting of the court, which will be presided over by Judge Madden, of Napanee.

WHY THE WORLD MUST HELP RUSSIA

The Russian problem will not down. The proceedings at the Genoa conference demonstrate this. It makes no difference that that great country has passed under the control of the Soviets, who are very largely responsible for the ruin of her social and industrial life. The fact remains that the other nations must take Russia into account.

Lloyd George knows this, hence his insistence that the other powers address themselves to the Russian problem. He and other British leaders know that Russia has been too important a factor in the world's food supply, and has been too good a market for the manufactured product of the industrial nations to be left out of account. They languish because Russia languishes, therefore Lloyd George, and those with him, say that Russia must be helped.

If this is true on general grounds, it is much more true in so far as the starving Russian children are concerned. Already the subscriptions already received by the Save the Children Fund, many thousands have been saved. But the work will still continue for there are many thousands more to be saved. Send your subscriptions to Sir Geoffrey Butler, Treasurer of the Save the Children Fund, Ottawa, or forward it through your local organization or bank.

"WAYSIDINGS"

By "GROUCHER"

FACTS VS. RUMORS.—Few people stop to think of the incalculable amount of harm one single tongue may do to a whole community. A rumor, especially if it may ruth a person's standing or character among his fellows, never looses in volume, and is similar to the boys rolling soft snow in the early winter. One spy in the enemy's army may cause destruction to thousands, so a lying tongue often accomplishes the same result. British justice says every man is innocent until proven guilty. Beware of the person who never does anything wrong himself, does more work in a day than any other person does in a week ; watch him, in all probability, like the Indian of old, he is after some one's scalp.

MUSIC.—The school curriculum is deficient in Canada by not having music estabonsed as one of the compulsory subjects of study. While certain songs are taught with a certain degree of success, the rudimentals are entirely neglected in most schools and class-rooms. In times past singing School Teachers, during winter season, held a series of schools in different sections throughout the country. To-day nothing of that kind exists outside of the cities. It is simply unbelieveable to inquire into and find the few sight-readers that are in existence to-day. There are many undiscovered mines of wealth of tone and quality that the hidden simply because the talent required to possess the knowledge, and no place for that great accomplishment has yet been found necessary.

THE U. F. O.'S.—Is for ourselves, some one says. Well, perhaps there's a reason. Some years ago in the now young west the country to school was dubbed "a hay-seed," "moss-back," and later a "sod-busier." To-day those epithets are only heard in the very large cities. Why ? Two-thirds of the business men, including those holding positions of trust, are those very same raw, uncouth boys. Professional men, including college teachers, doctors, ministers of the gospel, lose all their large quota among the farm-born.

While I am not a U.F.O.—still my admiration cannot be concealed for the fighting abilities of a government so largely made up of unexperienced, and let me say, unscrupulous politicians.

The part played by the Hon. Mr. Raney is unique and comparable to that famous body of men "of the Light Brigade," at the battle of Balaclava. Cannon to right of him, Fergy, cannon to left of him, Drury, cannon in front of him, Nickle, Lucas and Bullen volleying and thundering, cannon in front of him (Hey, there). Storm-ed, hail shot, shells—doesn't the light there, and Assisted by Drury.

We do not agree with them on many points, yet we must admit they have been a necessity in order to put through legislation making effective certain statutes that the old-time Liberal Party should come into existence.

Rowell had a luscious hope. The Drury so-called temperance act, seemingly themselves under the pretext that it was only a political dodge to corral them away from the U.F.O. Well, we say to the Hon. Mr. Rowell was pretty nearly was brave enough to follow his former adversary. He, too, went down with the rest of the temperance Grits were yet seen over Rowell's defeat.

We heard a party say the other day that he was always sorry for the under dog. I agree, but do not recognize the question that Drury will be raised from the U.F.O.

GALLANTRY.—What is it ? We are sometimes prone to believe that this term will soon become one of the lost arts and lost arts and sciences, and as little recognized as the speaking of the dead languages in modern conversation. The long continuance of those of a quarter of a century ago it was regarded as a great virtue, and many gave up life for freedom and the cause of liberty overseas, there were many who became martyrs to principle. Coming through this strata gave many an introduction to the "Smart Set," who, by the way, through their influence and example would not attain thereto unless becoming masculine in actions, taste and decorum. Again the demand for gallantry became so great that female help became of the utmost importance. Evidently familiarity breeds contempt, and in many instances (not all we are pleased to say) that the respect once bestowed upon the "gentler sex" became merely a common-place affair.

The young man said, "if girls apply for our positions, they stand on the same plane with us," they lower our standard of wages, and as for marriage, we scarcely can support one, instead of two. There may be something in the boy's contention. There may be other degrading influences tending to the same effect and result, and that is evil influence of some of the pictures shown at the "Movies." These thoughts may appear pessimistic, but the man who forgets the respect due to the gentler and weaker sex, and loses gallantry does not deserve the privilege of their association.

Cultivate gallantry and the world and you will be winners.

No Disappointments in Appointments

If You Use Long Distance

If you are a Salesman or a Buyer, why gamble valuable time and the cost of railroad fares that the party you wish to see will be in when you call on him?

The high cost of personal interviews is materially reduced and many more calls can be made per day if you make a definite appointment by Long Distance.

Avoiding disappointments by making appointments over Long Distance is one of the most profitable uses Salesmen can make of it. ALMY'S, a leading Montreal Department store, tell us their buyers always call up manufacturers before leaving town to call on them, to make sure their trip will not be in vain.

Station-to-Station rates reduce the cost of telephoning, and if you can telephone after 8.30 P.M.—to a man's home, perhaps — the evening rates are only about one-half the cost of day-time messages.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

This has been one of the big weeks of the session, with decisions on one or two important matters which are before the country. Since the mailing of the last letter, Parliament decided upon the formation of a committee to consider transportation costs and the relation to freight rates, and business generally of the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement of 1897. The committee has been named and has already started work, with the prospect of some interesting and perhaps exciting meetings ahead of it. The debate on the forming of the committee was full of interest and it brought from the Prime Minister one of the ablest speeches of his parliamentary career. The Conservatives demanded that the government announce its policy on the Crow's Nest Pass agreement without any further investigation or delay ; the Progressives would not admit that the agreement was a matter for debate at all, but claimed that the suspension of it should end forever on July 6th, and the Liberals argued that this was one of the biggest problems facing the country to-day, and as such, should be given the most careful study by a committee representing the whole House, and all sections of the country. With the prospect of both wings of the Opposition being against his government for the first time, Mr. King made a fighting speech. In asking for a committee, he said, he was but following out the best Liberal traditions of securing all the information possible before taking action.

The Conservatives on their amendment made a poor showing; they had but thirty-five votes, and then on the main motion, with both Conservatives and Progressives voting against it, the government emerged with a majority of seventeen, and surprised not only the House, but also the country.

The committee, representative of every province, and of all shades of opinion, has started work and will endeavor to get to the bottom of the problem and make a report as soon as possible. Its task is a big one, and there are many shades of opinion. The Progressives, coming from the prairie, demand, without any reservations or equivocation, that the suspension end on July 6th, since the resumption of the agreement will give them the advantage of preferential rates on wheat and flour, lumber, certain lines of hardware and metal products, and similar commodities which they must ship both east and west. There are, however, even among the Progressives themselves, many who admit that the agreement, as drawn in 1897, is entirely unsuited for conditions as they stand to-day. For instance there is a special rate on wheat eastward, but no preference on wheat, say from western Alberta to British Columbia ports for shipment through the Panama Canal or to the Orient. There is also a special rate for cattle when shipped westward, but no preference for cattle coming east. And while there is special provision for the western farmers' grain, there is no preference for the eastern farmers' potatoes. In short, while the agreement was drawn to fit conditions as they existed more than a score of years ago, it is entirely unsuited for the situation to-day ; that, at least, is the claim of everyone except the Progressive members who hail from the prairie provinces.

Even the railways themselves admit that freight rates must come down, but there is a very strong feeling that if the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement is to be revived in toto there is little hope for any revision downward of freight rates elsewhere. Rate reductions are being held up all over the country until it is known what will happen to this agreement, and the railways, it is generally accepted, would be glad to extend reductions generally if they are not compelled to return to this alleged discriminatory schedule.

With these questions before it, the special committee dealing with the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement assumes premier importance among the committees of the House. The Wheat Board Committee has finished its hearing of witnesses and is now dealing with drafts of its report to the House.

What will come out of this committee's work is rather hard to foresee. A considerable section of the committee favors passing legislation to create a compulsory board and then asking the provinces to pass concurrent legislation to make the federal law legal. On the other hand, it is somewhat difficult, admittedly, to bring about this, though, Alberta and Saskatchewan might pass the legislation asked for, since most of the marketing machinery functions in Winnipeg, and political conditions in Manitoba are very much in the air at the moment. A voluntary pool would be easy, but this the farmers of the west do not want to accept, and also there would be very great danger of a voluntary pool losing money on the year's operations.

Exclusion of the Orientals occupied a day's debate in the House on Monday. Most of the fight naturally came from British Columbia, the members from that province asserting party lines to plead for exclusion. The government asked that the resolution before it request "effective restriction" rather than exclusion, and was supported in that stand. Premier King urged that more could be done by negotiating without the word "exclusion" appearing in the resolution, and informed the House that the government was already negotiating with China to reduce the number of immigrants from that country.

The problem of militia estimates was moved on Tuesday when the government moved to reduce the vote for annual drill from $1,400,000 to $1,000,000. Major C. G. Power had moved to reduce the vote to $300,000 and the subject was discussed at the government caucus a week ago. The result was that the government, in addition, announced further reductions of $300,000 in other items, to meet the demand for reductions, and there is every prospect that the rest of the estimates for the department will go through with little in the way of fireworks.

Naval estimates are due any day now and they will be brought from the government an announcement of its policy. There is a runfor, as yet unconfirmed, that the government intends asking to be relieved of the three warships which Hon. C. C. Ballantyne accepted from the British government last year. There will be considerable opposition to this, should such a stand be taken, but on the other hand it is widely recognized and admitted that Canada's fleet, as at present constituted, is only an expense to the country with its perennial jaunts from Halifax to Esquimalt, via the Panama Canal and back again. The government's policy, however, will not be announced until the naval estimates come up.

The budget is still awaited. It will be down one of these days soon, but just when only Mr. Fielding knows, and he is not in the habit of laying out his thoughts for public inspection. He is understood to be all ready to bring it down, though, as soon as the proper day arrives and the expectations are that it will be announced almost any day now when the budget speech will be delivered. Then, with a two or three weeks' budget debate out of the way, the House will begin to clear the decks for the wind-up, which, from present indications, will not come for a month or six weeks yet.

Making Prisons Popular.

The Danish prison authorities in connection with the introduction of reforms, are considering the idea of publishing a newspaper for prisoners. It is felt that prisoners returning to civil life are handicapped by their lack of knowledge of current events.

The paper will cover political, home, foreign, general news, and possibly have illustrations.

In this connection it is interesting to note that it is the intention of the authorities to give suitable cinema exhibitions in prisons in the country, in addition to occasional concert parties and band performances, with an idea of keeping the inmates in touch with the outside world.—Tit-Bits.

A Gracious Act.

The gracious act of five candidates withdrawing in favor of Mme. Marie Curie's election as a member of the French Academy of Medicine is a fair example of French courtesy. It is also a fit testimonial to a woman who has devoted her life to single unselfish end. Few women have been so honored in France or in any country. There comes to mind Mme. Lebrun, the painter, who was elected to the Royal Academy and the Queen or Rumania, who is a corresponding member of the Academy of Fine Arts.

WRITER LAUDS OPERATORS AS REAL HEROINES

(By Dr. Wm. E. Barton)

One of the incidental points which I have noticed in several stories of calamity is the heroism of the telephone girl.

A fire breaks out in a high office building. The girl at the switchboard calls up every office and tells the occupants to get out.

A dam breaks, and a flood rushes down the valley. The telephone girls stick to their posts and send word ahead, and save many lives.

A burglar comes in the night : a frightened woman calls the police station, but before she gets in her call, the burglar strikes her senseless. The telephone girl intuitively knows the meaning of the interrupted call and tells the police where the trouble is.

Such things as these I remember to have read.

I do not know of a town where the people do not complain of the telephone service.

In common with my fellow men, I, too, have seasons of impatience because the service is not better.

But every now and then I consider how wonderful it is that the service is as good as it is.

I read how the boys in France broke out into cheers when the first contingent of telephone girls arrived. I cheered with them. I have used the telephone in many foreign countries, and can testify that in comparison with the service there, the telephone girl on this side of the water is an angel.

She has a pleasant voice. She is habitually courteous. She is resourceful. If once in a long time her job gets on her nerves, so also does mine.

I stood a few days ago beside the central operator in a large railway station at a time when trains were coming in in considerable numbers, and many people were wanting telephone connections in a hurry.

I was impressed by her quiet, courteous demeanor, her voice that did not rise, and the rapidity with which she did her work.

She was doubtless above the average telephone girl, and had a more responsible position than most of them ; but she is not the only one of her kind.

Let me suggest that we all try to be a little more patient and courteous toward the telephone girl.

In the first place, I think she deserves it. In the next place, I think it will improve the service.

BROUGHT BACK RICHES.

Czechs That Escaped From Russia Were Thrifty.

The Czech soldiers who deserted from the Austrian to the Russian armies and later returned home via Vladivostok and Vancouver, brought with them many millions in Russian gold rubles, enough to set the new Czecho-Slovakian Republic on its feet, according to an article from the Paris bureau of the Brooklyn Eagle. The story was found through tracing the coins which were recently put into circulation in France and the United States, back to Prague, the capital of the Czechs.

There were 400,000 Czechs in the Russian armies at the time of the revolution. Remaining steadfast to the allied cause after the Bolshevik regime commenced, they marched across Russia and joined the anti-Bolshevik forces. They were the backbone of Kolchak's ill-starred attempt to restore the old regime. Later they turned back into Siberia and fought their way to the Pacific. That much is known.

But here is the other story. In the Urals, the range dividing Europe and Asia, they found at Ekaterinlnsk, the Constituent Assembly and its anti-Bolshevik administration—and the Russian treasure. While the Russian dignitaries searched the town for some nice vaults, the Czechs took the money and started each on the railway, later delivering their forty cars of the yellow stuff to Kolchak. For the next twelve months they kept an eye on Kolchak and the $210,000,000 stored precariously on a siding at Omsk.

When Kolchak was finished the local Bolsheviki grabbed thirty-six of the cars, but the retreating Czechs ran four cars out to the main line and were away for the east again with $32,500,000. By this time they had decided that the money was divinely appointed for the use of the new Czech Government and they took it very carefully home, finally delivering $30,000,000 to the authorities at Prague. The money is now being used to establish the credit and encourage the industries of the new Government and is finding its way to other countries.

"Bungalettes"

Here is the latest idea in camps for motorists, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine: An Oakland, Cal., concern is spending no less than $80,000 in erecting "bungalettes" on an eight-acre tract, to be let to motoring tourists by the night or for any longer period "up to fifteen years," as the management jokingly announces, which is the length of the lease on the land. These simple residences are designed to take the place of tents, and while their furnishings are meager compared with regular houses, they offer considerably more in the way of conveniences than is commonly offered by an ordinary tent. These bungalettes are of two types, some with one room and some with two rooms. They are built entirely of wood, and are equipped with sinks, running water, electric lights, two-burner gas plates, etc.

STUDY TOUR FOR BOYS

About the best thing a father can do for his boys is to encourage them to travel and see something of the world, before they become too keenly engrossed in commercial life. Travel is a great educator—it enriches the mind and fits the youth to better fill his place in life. A normal boy can't be bookish—he assimilates and retains knowledge. Travel gives him his opportunity—it fits him for every phase in life.

A tour of Europe is at present being organized under the personal supervision of Mr. T. H. Matthews, M.A., (Oxon) Assistant Professor of Mathematics, McGill University, and late instructor—Lieutenant Royal Navy. In addition local guides will be secured to conduct excursions and give lectures on the artistic, historic, literary and economic significance of the sights seen and the places visited.

A most carefully planned and interesting itinerary has been arranged including visits to Montreal, Liverpool, Chester, Stratfordon-Avon, Oxford, London, Paris, Versailles, Fontainebleau, Rheims, Lyons, Marseilles, Cannes, Nice, Monaco, Mentone, Pisa, Genoa, Rome, Naples, Sorrento, Capri, Pompeii, Vesuvius, Florence, Venice, Trent, Innsbruck, Munich, the Passion Play at Oberammergau, Nuremberg, Mayence, the Rhine, Cologne, Brussels, Louvain, and Ostend, returning through London and Liverpool.

This exceptional tour starts from Montreal on Saturday, June 24th, calling at Quebec, by the splendid White Star Line Steamship "Canopic" (12,000 tons). A period of approximately two months will be occupied by the tour as by the itinerary the return trip is made from Liverpool by the fine steamship "Regina" (16,500 tons) arriving at Montreal on August 26th.

The arrangements for this tour are most complete and the charge which is a minimum one covers everything in the way of transportation, hotel accommodation with three meals a day, transfers, sight-seeing fees, in brief all necessary travelling expenses for the entire tour.

A "Rebel's" Library.

A curious relic of the past comes to view in the sale at Montreal recently of the library of 6,000 books at one time the possession of Louis Joseph Papineau, leader of the Rebellion in Lower Canada in 1837, and for years a fiery radical and reformer among the French-Canadians. Although Papineau died in 1870, his library has remained in his chateau at Montebello, on the Ottawa river, 40 miles down from the capital, where the former leader lived in dignified retirement for twenty years. Papineau had been a great reader, and his books are said to have been a reflection of his own life. Here, in the tower of the manor house, the library has remained until the heirs decided to wind up the estate.

It is difficult to realise that the fiery agitator of the 30's, he whose alert portrait hangs in the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa, should finally settle down as a recluse in a chateau. DeCelles, his biographer, gives this picture of his old age:

"Papineau, like many of his contemporaries, wrote much and at great length. His letters, written in a large and legible hand, generally covered from four to eight pages. Correspondence took up a great part of his leisure time at La Petite Nation, where boundless hospitality ever awaited his friends. One felt at home under the roof of the charming manor house of Montebello, with its vast apartments affording through wide windows its widely extended views of the beautiful waters of the Ottawa. There was nothing surely here to suggest the ruder elements of democracy. Papineau was evidently a Pierre Leroux in theory only, his tastes and manner were rather those of an aristocrat." That Papineau was born to live in opposition was the inference from the earlier years of his life. That he himself realized this is clear, from a laughing remark which he once made when explaining his late arrival at a meeting: "I waited to take an opposition boat."

ATHLETIC INSECTS.

Beetles and Bugs Have Great Strength and Speed.

When man boasts of his speed, agility, and strength, it is well for him to remember that there are few insects, however insignificant, which cannot make his finest feats look ridiculous.

He may be able to sprint one hundred yards in ten seconds, or run a mile in less than four and a half minutes; but there are flies, so small as to be scarcely visible, which relatively can accomplish much more wonderful performances. One such fly, for example, has been known to travel at a speed of considerably over five hundred steps a second.

If man could rival this rapidity of movement he could cover a mile in three seconds. In thirty-five minutes he could reach Berlin from London; and an hour's journey would take him as far as Rome. He would, in fact, be able to travel on his feet ten times as quickly as he could in a swift airplane.

It is said that a midge can fly twice as fast as the swiftest man can run, and faster than a Derby winner can gallop. What, then, would be man's speed if he could travel at a rate in proportion to his relative size?

Probably there is no man living who can jump a distance of twenty-five feet, or to a height of six and a half feet. A flea, however, makes light of jumping a hundred times its own height, and to a much greater distance.

Possessed of leaping power in proportion to his size, a man could clear the Clock Tower at Westminster, with Nelson's Column poised on its top; half-a-dozen more leaps would take him, in a straight line, over the houses to the top of Ludgate Hill; and from there a single bound would carry him over the cross of St. Paul's Cathedral into Cheapside. And he would accomplish this amazing feat in less time than it takes to describe it.

A flea, too, is a veritable Samson, for it can lift and walk away with twenty-five times its own weight. If a man were relatively strong he could perform feats of lifting that would make the world gasp.

He could, for example, raise a couple of gigantic Shire horses high above his head, one on each hand; and he would be able to walk off with a score of stalwart Lifeguardsmen, standing on a platform, similarly elevated.

But the flea is a weakling compared with the horn-beetle, which is said to be able to lift two hundred times its own weight. If a man had relatively powerful muscles he would make light of carrying a burden of fifteen tons. He could, in fact, walk off with $10,000,000 in gold; and he could support the entire population of a village of over three hundred inhabitants.

Probably no man could go entirely without food for two months and survive. But a spider has been known to dispense with food of any kind for ten months; and a beetle has come safely through a three years' fast.

It is well, perhaps, that man has not an appetite like that of a spider. If he had, nothing less than ten hundredweight of food every twenty-four hours would satisfy him. His daily menu, in fact, would probably contain such items as these—three twenty-pound hams, a few hundred eggs, a hundredweight or so of fish, two or three sheep, a quarter of an ox, and fifty loaves.

The Orange.

An eminent pomologist says that the orange was originally a pear-shaped fruit about the size of the common wild cherry. Its evolution is believed to be due to twelve hundred years of cultivation.

SEALS' NOSES.

Wonderful Manner In Which Nostrils Are Protected.

Most of us when we go in for diving have the very unpleasant experience of getting our nostrils full of water. Nature did not design man to be a diving animal, otherwise she would have been as clever with his nose as she has been with the seal's.

The seal is, without doubt, the cleverest diver in the animal world, and his nose is a very ingenious contrivance indeed. Each nostril is provided with muscles which close it hermetically at the owner's will. And the shape of the nose is such that when the nostrils are closed not a drop of water can enter.

With seals the closing of the nostrils at the moment of diving has become an automatic process.

This is wonderful enough, but we can see a still more remarkable application of the same principle in an animal as far removed from the seal as chalk is from cheese.

The seal is a water animal. The other owner of trap-door nostrils is the camel, an inhabitant of the driest parts of the world, the waterless sandy deserts. Now why should the camel require such an apparatus? He is not troubled with water, but he is troubled with dust; not the dust that we see in this country, but the fierce blinding dust storms of the desert.

These are so violent that tiny particles are driven into the works of even the most finely made watch, which becomes at once clogged and useless. If the camel had not nostrils which were perfectly dust-tight, he could never endure the dreadful sand and dust storms.

Not the William She Meant.

A lady engaged a new gardener. After breakfast one morning she sauntered out among the flowers, and seeing the new man hard at work, said—

"Well, how's my Sweet William this morning?"

"Nicely, thanks, ma'am," replied the man. But, please, ma'am, how did you know my name was Bill?"

The Bible of the Rev. John Newton, hymn-writer and divine, has just been presented to the library of the British and Foreign Bible Society. There are many marginal notes and underlined verses, which indicate how carefully the book was read and prized. Our Oldest Art Society

The Ontario Society of Artists, which celebrates its fiftieth anniversary this year, is the oldest organisation of its kind in Canada. As a rule, one assumes that Dominion societies are the parents and provincial societies the children, but in the case of art that is not so. In fact, the O. S. A. might claim to be the father of the Royal Canadian Academy, which did not come into existence until some years after the artists of Ontario had organized. There were other art societies before Confederation, but all of them have been dead for so long that their memory hardly remains. The O. S. A. had the advantage of coming into existence just at the time when the national spirit was flaming high in this country, as a direct result of the Federation of British America. Men began to realise for the first time that artists could not go on forever imitating the English schools. They had to find their subjects in Canada, and learn the best way of putting on canvas the beauties of their own land.

Even in a democratic country noble patrons count for something, and our artists will always remember with gratitude the two Governors-General who encouraged and fostered painting in Canada. Lord Dufferin was the first of them, and he was not the sort of man to play at encouraging the intellectual aspirations of colonials. He dabbed a little in painting and sketching himself, and several pictures owned by him were placed in the early exhibitions of the O. S. A. The Marquis of Lorne, whose wife, the Princess Louise, also painted with skill, co-operated with the Ontario artists in bringing the Canadian Royal Academy into existence. In creating a Dominion-wide association, the Governor-General and his royal wife had the support of Mr. Lucius R. O'Brien, at that time vice-president of the Ontario society. One other titled painter has sent pictures from Rideau Hall to the Ontario exhibitions. The popular Princess Patricia added painting to her other accomplishments, and her canvases easily won a place on their merits in exhibitions were exacting hanging committees were disappointing dozens of aspiring artists.

Only two of the artists who journeyed up to John A. Fraser's home on Gould street on a June day in 1872, when that gifted, but belligerent, painter called the meeting to organise the art society, are still alive. T. Mower Martin is one of the surviving foundation members, but he has done little painting in recent years. With Robert F. Gagen, however, there has been no standing still. He had pictures in the first exhibition of the O. S. A., which opened on Easter Monday, 1873, and in the fiftieth exhibition, now on view in Toronto, he is showing marines that are among the most vigorous ever done by a Canadian painter. Robert F. Gagen is the ever-young man among the artists of this country, and he still keeps abreast of the modern movements. One observer of things artistic recently remarked that if Mr. Gagen continues to work a few years longer, he may yet be asked to fill the vacant place in the Group of Seven. At the present time, there are only six stars in that famous constellation.

The artists of Canada may claim without much danger of contradiction, that our painters have made greater headway with the establishment of a native school than have our authors or our poets or our dramatists. There is no native drama in the Dominion as yet, and little great prose. The poets have done better than the writers of fiction, but even they have not been as creative as our painters. The artists are now interpreting their country on canvas with originality, with vitality and with power. To the Ontario Society of Artists must be given the credit of having fostered the native art in this country. Their efforts brought into existence, after several setbacks and disappointments, the art school where the young men and women are learning the technique of painting. This institution is now thirty years old. At their exhibitions, all the innovators have had their first pictures introduced to the public. Now the society contains many schools of thought, and the controversies between the different groups are keen and not always untinged with unkindness. In other words, the art movements of Canada are so very much alive that they can spare a little of their superfluous energy to fight one another, though it is not a fight to the death so much as it is a fight to the life of art.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Substitute for Wood Pulp.

Britain is largely dependent on foreign countries, especially Scandinavia, for its supplies of paper or the wood pulp from which it is made, the chief sources of supply within the Empire being Newfoundland and Canada. The Imperial Institute has, therefore, given special attention to the possible substitutes for wood, which are to be found in the grasses growing in tropical and sub-tropical countries. Among these is the tambookie grass of South Africa. This, on examination at the Imperial Institute, was found to give a yield of about 33 per cent. of paper of excellent quality, and the prospects of a paper industry in South Africa based on this material are now being carefully considered. Tambookie grass is by no means the only paper-making material obtainable in South Africa, and from the information available at the Imperial Institute it seems likely that the range of materials available will enable several classes of paper to be made.

ANCESTORS OF DOGS

SOME CANINES POSSESS PECULIAR FOREFATHERS.

The Eskimo Dog Is a Contribution Made by Canada—Contradictory Opinions Regarding the Wolf-dog and Its Habits.

R. I. Pocock, of the London Zoological Gardens, has contributed to the magazine Conquest an article about dogs and their remote ancestors. That these were akin to the present-day wolf or jackal he does not doubt, and he is convinced that the fox played no part in the production of the dog. He points out that we have only four words for canine animals—wolf, fox, jackal and dog, and these words have been loosely applied in many cases, so that an animal described by a traveler as a dog, a fox or a wolf is not necessarily closely akin to the dog, fox or wolf that is known to Europeans and North Americans. For instance, the long-eared fox of South Africa differs far more from the English fox than the latter does from a wolf; while the maned wolf of South America is more like a gigantic fox on long legs and resembles a wolf only in stature. The Brazilian crab-eating dog, which, by the way, does not eat crabs, is not like either our dogs or our foxes, while the hunting dog of Africa and the red dog of India differ more from our dogs than wolves and jackals do.

Foxes are so different from any of our dogs that Mr. Pocock does not believe in the possibility of a fox-dog hybrid. Wolves and jackals, however, are like our dogs and resemble each other so closely that one might call the jackal a small wolf or the wolf a large jackal, with such different characteristics as may be explained by their varying size, strength and speed. Zoologists have expressed the kinship between dogs, wolves and jackals by giving to them the name Canis, and the latter two are the only genuinely wild species of Canis known. He does not class the dingoes of Australia with them, for he is convinced that these wild dogs are literally dogs that have gone wild. They are practically indistinguishable from the pariah dogs of the East and were, no doubt, taken in prehistoric times from Southern Asia to Australia by the blacks, who were the first settlers.

It is admittedly difficult to see any resemblance between many, if not most, modern breeds of dog to either the jackal or the wolf. But it is almost as difficult to see a resemblance between the fox terrier and the bulldog, neither of which is more unlike a jackal than each other. The Pom might more readily be conceived of as a toy wolf than as a toy St. Bernard. But there are breeds that are extremely wolf-like in appearance, and some of them have lately become fashionable. We refer to the European police dogs—German and Belgian—which are nothing more than sheep dogs of their respective countries, just as the collie is the sheep dog of Scotland. The Eskimo dog and the Scandinavian elk hound also strongly resemble wolves. The Eskimo is particularly interesting to the student of these matters, for, like the wolf, it does not bark. This fact tends to weaken the case of those who have argued that the barking of domestic dogs proves that they did not descend from wolves.

Another point of interest is that the dogs that revert in appearance to the wolf are dogs kept in the most natural of conditions and propagated for purposes in which their wild ancestors might have been expected to excel. That is to say it is the working dogs the dogs of utility, like the sheep dogs of Europe and Scotland and the hunting and sled dogs of the Arctic which throw back to their ancestors. Some of the huskies of the north are hardly less fierce than wolves and are almost as strong and swift. On the other hand, can one imagine a more ferocious guard than a wolf it he could be trained as are the police dogs of Europe?

Despite this kinship between wolves and dogs, Mr. Pocock says it is a mistake to imagine that if a wolf cub is taken early enough from its dam it can be reared and trained to become a tame and trustworthy animal. He says that at the Zoological gardens from time to time a good number of wolf pups have been sold, and that while up to a point everything goes well, sooner or later the character of the wold beast asserts itself and the wolf is either returned or sent to some other menagerie. On the other hand, the writer remembers some years ago being frequently visited by a full-grown gray wolf, which was the constant nightly companion of Mr. Carter, formerly of the Riverdale Zoo. Whether he eventually developed wolfish characteristics cannot be said, but at the time he was just like a rather well-behaved dog. Other people have had similar experiences, but probably Mr. Pocock would say that the time had not come for the outbreak of the wolf nature, which would make it impossible to have such animals as companions.—J. V. McArce, in the Toronto Mail and Empire.

The Quail.

Quails are songbirds, according to the executive committee of the Minnesota Humane Society. Asserting that they are also allies of farmers, resolutions adopted by the committee urge that all farmers of the states they inhabit be asked to feed and care for them. It is asserted that the weeds and the small amount of grain thus expended would be abundantly repaid in the destruction of insect pests and the seeds of noxious weeds.

Decision Handed Down.

Judge H. A. Lavell gave his decision in the case of the Bell Telephone Company vs. the Township of Ernestown, which was heard at Odessa recently. The Bell Telephone Company claimed that their assessment for mileage of polls, wires and income in that township was excessive. Through an error, the Telephone Company had failed to appear at the sitting of the Court of Revision and make objection to this assessment. When the case was heard Judge Lavell reserved his decision, but after considering the evidence carefully he decided that the company lost its chance of getting any redress for the excess assessment on polls and wires, but on the matter of income the township had no right to collect any taxes, and the money which was paid for the assessment on income must be returned. According to the act, a city, town or village is entitled to collect taxes on the income, but this act does not apply to a township. It is understood that there is a similar case to be tried at Adolphustown in the near future.

David P. Brant, the father ; Elizabeth Brant, mother ; Burton, a son, and three daughters, Indians of the Mohawk Reserve, Tyendinaga township, have been committed to the county jail by Magistrate Bedford at Deseronto. The family are charged with obstructing and assaulting peace officers in the discharge of their duties. David Brant, who was convicted on a B.O.T.A. charge last autumn, was fined, but failed to pay the fine. Provincial Officer Hughes and License Inspector Frank Naphin were accordingly ordered to serve him with the order for commitment. When they appeared on the reserve, however, they were set upon by the entire family, who brought pitchforks into action. The officers where overpowered, but, returning the following day with reinforcements, arrested the whole family.

Wood May Become Important as Fuel.

In view of the threatened difficulty in obtaining coal in the near future, the question of the value of wood as a fuel again becomes important. According to the Forest Products Laboratories of the Department of the Interior, Canada, the main considerations in selecting wood for fuel are its weight and dryness. Pound for pound, all woods, equally dry, have about the same heating value. A cord of dry hardwood, such as birch, has approximately the same heating value as a ton of coal, but in the case of soft woods, as much as two cords would, in some instances, be necessary to get the same amount of heat.

PROFITEERS IN OIL.

Stocks Are Large But the Prices Soar.

WASHINGTON, May 15. — While the oil companies have been boosting the price of gasoline to an unprecedented peace- time level, they have been accumulating the greatest stock of this fuel on record.

The nation's gasoline stock on April 1 passed by some 47,000,000 gallons the high record mark of 807,000,000 gallons, reported in storage on March 1, according to a statistical summary just issued by the Bureau of Mines. Stocks of 854,232,000 gallons were on hand April 1—a supply 20 per cent. greater than for April 1, 1921, and 36 per cent. greater than for April 1, 1920.

Domestic consumption of gasoline for the first quarter of 1922 shows an increase of 7 per cent. over the first quarter of 1921, and 25 per cent. over the corresponding period in 1920.

A rush by big oil companies to obtain leases in the Philippines is in progress as a result of the recent legislation which was enacted upon the earnest recommendation of the American State Department, according to advices reaching here from Manila. Included in the companies which are reported to have secured extensive leases are the Standard Oil Company of California and the "Benedum," or independent group. A number of wells have already been sunk.

Secrecy is being maintained by company officials as to the complete results of their explorations, but it is known that oil has been struck in several wells on the Bondoc Peninsula, and rich shootings are reported from other districts. A majority of the leases thus far secured are in Luzon, Mindanao and Leyte.

PRINCE OF WALES HURT.

Head Gashed When Struck by Ball at Polo.

MANILA, May 15.—The Prince of Wales, who arrived here Saturday morning, suffered a slight injury during a polo game, when a player behind him hit a ball that struck the prince a glancing blow over the right eyebrow, cutting a gash inch and a half long. It was necessary to put two stitches in the wound. The wound is not serious. The prince retired from the game and returned to the cruiser Renown. He was unable to attend the dinner and reception that Governor-General Wood had arranged for him.

The prince is said to be the first heir to the throne of the world power to visit the Philippines.

When the Renown, which was escorted into the harbor by United States destroyers, dropped anchor, the national salute of 21 guns was fired and Governor-General Leonard Wood made an official call on the prince aboard the cruiser. Later the prince disembarked and was received by Vice-Governor Gilmore, on behalf of the Philippine Government, and was escorted by a troop of cavalry to Malacan Palace, where he called officially on Governor Wood and then lunched informally with him.

Thousands cheered the prince as he drove through the city. During his three-day visit to the Philippines he will be busy almost every hour at receptions by Governor Wood and British members of the community, polo games, visits to Port McKinley and the Cavite Naval Station and other entertainments.

WHEAT FIELDS FLOODED.

Disaster Overtakes the Western Colony of Hutterites.

WINNIPEG, May 15.—Disaster overtook the colony of Hutterites, fifteen miles west of here, on Saturday night, when the temporary dyke constructed by them to stem the encroaching flood of the Assiniboine river, went out during the hours of darkness, allowing the water to cover about one thousand acres of wheat-sown land immediately to the south, threatening thousands of other acres of low-lying spots and cutting off the colony from easy access to other districts.

Day after day, night after night, the colony had fought the flood, only to see most of its efforts go for nought. Should the river rise any more, only superhuman efforts will be able to save the results of months of toil from complete ruin.

The flood situation for miles along the south side of Portage is serious, but the consequences would have been more serious if large quantities of water had not made its escapes to the prairie north of the river.

Except at Iberville it is not the Assiniboine that is directly flooding the land, but the waters that are backing up coulees that lead inland from the south bank. These waters are naturally finding their way to the low-lying places, and leaving their mark wherever they go.

Hurried efforts at dyking are being carried on in all directions at Iberville, but the grades of the roads and two railway lines will prevent any widespread flooding beyond that already mentioned.

Son In Stolen Auto.

MONTREAL, May 15.—After offering the police the use of his car to catch auto thieves, J. A. Moreau found, after a chase Saturday afternoon when a speed of 58 miles an hour was attained, that the man at the wheel of the stolen automobile was his 16-year-old son, Paul. The fugitive car was brought to a halt only when a revolver shot from the pursuing police burst a tire. Young Moreau and two companions, youths of 18 and 19, were arrested on charges of having stolen the car and of having stolen goods, found in it, in their possession.

PASSION PLAY OPENS

Great Crowds Are Flocking to Oberammergau.

Much Interest Displayed in Historic Performance In Teutonic Village —Anton Lang, Who Is an Interesting Personality, Has Become an Important Figure in the Production.

OBERAMMERGAU, May 15.—More than four thousand persons witnessed the opening performance of the famous Passion Play here Sunday. An endless procession of motor busses and private cars commenced, congesting the village main street. Sunday morning every avenue leading to the festival theatre was filled with the surging crowd of expectant visitors.

Those who came a day or two early found the village still in the throes of feverish last-minute preparations, but the carpenters and others have now finished their work and everything was spick and span and in shape for the reception of the guests.

As there is no evident disposition on the part of the villagers to extort exorbitant prices from the guests, the success of the festival will depend upon their determination to continue to suppress such tendencies and hold up the moral lesson taught in one of the scenes of the passion play, where Anton Lang, taking the role of Christus, drives the money-changers from the temple.

Chief interest now centres on the corner, where Anton Lang, who has taken the part of Christus in three festivals, has on display many of the articles of pottery that he has made. His photographs are bought eagerly and form a valuable souvenir hunters.

In addition to the roles of Christus and a skilled potter, his third role is that of the husband of the busiest housewife in all Oberammergau, who gives food and shelter to more persons than anyone else in the village.

An interesting member of the family group is the donkey which carries Christus into Jerusalem and during the remaining time fulfils the vocation as a beast of burden by drawing a luggage cart.

Anton Lang is assuredly one of the greatest assets Oberammergau possesses and the festival committee would have made an irretrievable mistake had they not elected him to impersonate the important role this season despite the fact that his popularity and material successes have been resented by a certain element in the village.

Lang is now 47 years old, of rather frail physique and does not indicate that he has the tremendous reserve strength that is necessary to enact the exhausting role where he will be obliged to carry the heavy cross for fifteen minutes and hang suspended upon it for twenty minutes, a task now rendered more difficult since German archaeologists have discovered the original was made from the carved trunk of a small tree, leaving both the discomfiture and fatigue.

He is in imminent danger of heart failure each time and one false movement during the impressive descent from the cross may cause the blood to rush too suddenly to his head and cost the actor his life.

When witnessed for the second time within a week the performance gains impressiveness and gives one an increased respect for these simple mountaineers who are perpetuating the religious vow made by their ancestors three centuries ago.

Some of the stage pictures are so astoundingly rich in design and coloring that they would do credit to any metropolitan stage. But in the last analysis the unique characteristics of the Oberammergau passion play lies in certain crudities and is an art which could not be successfully transplanted to any other soil so long as the villagers retain their attitude of reverence and simplicity toward their great Christus drama.

It is possible that Martha Viet, the new Mary, will grow into the part, but so far she is not possessed of the qualities of voice and personality of her distinguished predecessor. The two outstanding figures of the play are Hugo Rutz, the brawny village blacksmith, who takes the role of the High Priest Caiphas with astonishing dignity and histrionic power, and Hans Mayr, who takes the role of Judas. The latter is the member of a distinguished family of Oberammergau players.

As yet it is impossible to gain a concrete idea of the number of visitors expected, as the machinery for listing guests is proceeding with traditional Bavarian slowness. It is reported that Rudyard Kipling is coming, but nothing is known of Lloyd George's intention of attending.

Need the Kaiser Again.

LONDON, May 15.—In order to regain its own position in the world, Germany needs the kaiser again, says Loddendorf in an article in the Sunday Pictorial. He continues:

"Our enemies are still glaring at the stern, self-controlled Prussian spirit and will not recognize the danger that would arise if the Bolshevist mind were to replace the nationalist mind among the German people.

"What the German people require in the near future is autocratic dictatorship. German conditions and character give unqualified preference to monarchy."

TO MEET AT THE HAGUE

Premier Lloyd George Plans Another Conference.

Wants United States to Join In Effort to Settle Russian Problem—Outlook for Proposal Does Not Look Very Bright, as Soviet Delegates Seem Defiant.

GENOA, May 15.—Trying to build something up on the ruins of the Genoa Conference, Premier Lloyd George has succeeded in having the convening powers agree to a proposal for another attempt to reach an agreement with the Russian Government, to be begun at The Hague on June 15.

It will, therefore, be proposed to the Political Commission by Britain, France, Italy, Japan and Belgium that the Governments represented at Genoa send delegates to The Hague next month to choose, by a panel, a commission of experts of the powers. For a period of ten days, that is, up to June 26, these experts would try to draft a common memorandum stating the attitude of the powers toward Russia.

This memorandum would then be submitted to the Governments of the powers and, if approved, a Russian committee of experts would meet the powers' commission of experts and negotiate up to October 26 in an effort to reach an agreement on the issues of Russian credits, debts and private property owned by foreigners in Russia. Should an agreement be reached, acceptance or rejection of its terms would be put up to the Governments.

All the convening powers would pledge themselves to conclude no separate treaties with Russia up to October 26, nor support their nationals in any effort to obtain property or rights in Russia which were not theirs before the inauguration of the Soviet regime.

The action of the Governments upon the agreement, if reached at The Hague, would determine whether or not there would be another conference of the powers' statesmen.

It was also decided by the convening powers to make an effort to get the United States to co-operate in The Hague plan, and a draft of the plan was handed to Ambassador Child, and he was asked to communicate it to Washington, and ask what would be the attitude of the American Government toward the proposal.

The decision reached by the convening powers has the inconvenience of meeting the opposition of the Russians, whose acceptance, of course, is necessary to make it work. The proposals having been submitted to the Russians, they cannot yet refuse it, but M. Tchitcherin said in an interview that he did not think much of it. He made three points:

"In the first place," he said, "we protest against these decisions relative to Russia in all Oberammergau, who gives food and shelter to more persons than anyone else in the village.

Swan, aged 50, an Englishman who has been visiting in this country for the past eight months, Friday night shot and killed his wife, Blanche, on the homestead of their son-in-law, Leslie Ashton, 40 miles away, near Westlock, Alta. According to a despatch, in a fit of temper, Swan drew a revolver and fired two shots at his wife, one bullet piercing her heart and the other entering the stomach. She died shortly afterwards.

Mrs. Ashton, Swan's daughter, battled with her irate father and shoved him out of doors. Swan escaped to the bush. He was pursued by his son-in-law, who overtook him and forced him to disarm.

Swan has been arrested by the provincial police on a charge of murder.

The Mystery of the Silver Dagger

By RANDALL PARRISH

Author of "The Strange Case of Cavendish"

Illustrations by A. Weil

Copyright, by Randall Parrish

I stole as silently as possible across to the door. It was securely locked, of course, and could be forced open, if at all, only by creating considerable alarm. I stood, staring helplessly about, feeling the impossibility of escape. I could only wait for my jailers to appear, impotent to aid myself in any way—or her. After all, that last thought was the most impelling. That they suspected Marie Gessler of being implicated in both murder and robbery was clearly evident; indeed, they not only suspected, but were convinced that she had done the deed. I was secretly obliged to admit that they had some reason to so believe, that they even possessed proof which would probably convict her in court of the crime. This gave them a terrible advantage over the girl, once they had her bodily in their possession. Guilty or not guilty, she could not establish her innocence; under torture and threat, such as they would doubtless use in their money lust, there was no knowing what might happen. Alone, helpless in the grasp of these unscrupulous crooks, her fate might be death, disgrace. Certainly it would be foul insult, and, if she failed to yield, the desire for revenge might even drive those cowards to a secret denouncement of her to the police. This, however, would be their last resort; they would exhaust all other efforts first. And no one else knew of her danger; no one else was in position to aid her; she must face this gang absolutely alone unless I could effect an escape. It was not merely my own life at stake; hers was also in the balance.

And the time in which to act was short. If I escaped at all, it must be accomplished before my jailers returned, before they dreamed that I had aroused from unconsciousness, or had strength enough to make the attempt. But what possible way suggested itself? I felt in my pockets; they were utterly empty, except for a single overlooked bill. There was no means of egress other than the window and that seemed hopeless. Yet in desperation I crossed over once more, and again looked out. Could I—dare I—attempt to cling to that slight ledge in my stocking feet, even for the one or two steps necessary to reach the next window? The very conception of such a feat made my head reel giddily and my stomach rise in protest. Besides, even if I made it by some miracle, what if that other window should be closed and locked? How could I ever move backward to regain safety?

Yet wait; there was a way, dangerous enough to be sure, yet possible if I possessed the necessary nerve. There were several inches of ledge (how) they would help some as grasping spots for the hands. The one within reach appeared solid enough, firmly anchored to the casement, and secured to the brick wall by means of an iron bolt. Between the two the space to be traversed was not wider than a single stride on the ground, but such would bridge the gulf below. If I had some thin, tough substance, such as cord, which would keep me upright—I might hold my footing on the narrow stone and make the passage slowly. It was a daring, deadly venture, but possible.

But what could I hope to utilize as a support? The bare room offered but a single suggestion—the dirty coverlet which had been thrown over me. Torn apart from corner to corner, and twisted into the form of a rope, it ought to safely sustain my entire weight before it too slipped. I stood to tear with my teeth, and thus succeeded in ripping the thing from end to end. It was scarcely long enough for the purpose, which compelled me to make the noose correspondingly small. However, with this improvised lasso gripped in my right hand I took position astride the sill of the window. In order to better project the loosened end over some protuberance of the blind beyond. By holding tight to the frame with my left hand, the right was left free, and I was enabled to lean out far enough to obtain a clear throw. There was little the noose could catch on, and continued failure left me listless and discouraged. I lost hope, yet kept at it, and finally, to my surprise, the thing did catch and settled over an iron projection of the fence, and clung there, extending straight across from window to window. I hardly dared breathe as I drew the thing taut and tested the firmness with which it was held at the other end. The noose closed down tightly about the iron staple, and resisted every effort at release. To all seeming it was as safely anchored as though I had placed it there by hand. So much for very knowledge that this had been accomplished, that the door was open, brought with it a return of the feeling of horror with which I had first contemplated the possibility of such an accomplishment. Would I ever dare the attempt? My head swam as I gazed downward, and then across, and I shrank back absolutely terrified at the very thought.

Yet my nerve returned, and I found myself cool and determined. It was no pleasant task to be sure, and I was compelled to steel myself to the attempt, yet I no longer held back paralyzed by fear. I easily found a secure fastening for the strip of bed-spread at my own window, and then, satisfied that it was taut and securely held at both ends, lowered my body cautiously over the sill, until my stockinged feet nervously gripped the narrow stone of the coping. I dare not look down or permit my mind to dwell, for an instant on what was below. Slowly I straightened up, until my entire weight was upheld by this precarious foot-hold. To advance step by step was impossible; all I could hope to accomplish by locomotion was to stealthily advance one foot a few inches, sliding it along the stone, ever retaining contact, and then, as carefully drawing the other after until they met, toe and heel. It was the slow progress of a snail, yet the slightest effort at hurrying would mean a certain fall.

This was not unduly perilous, however, so long as I retained firm hold on the sill, or even could grip my fingers over the lower frame of the open blind, as I was enabled thus to partially sustain my weight, and, even if a foot slipped, the feel of the solid wood yielded confidence. But finally my hand reached out and grasped only the cloth cord, twisted into some semblance of a rope, and, as it gave sickeningly to the pressure, the old fear swept over me in a torrent of agony. I could never make it—never! I would go swirling, crashing down to that death below. It was but a step, to be sure; a step and I could reach the firmness of the other blind; but, oh, the step—the speechless horror of it! Yet there was no going backward; I tried this, only to realize at once its helplessness, and the perspiration burst out from every pore, as the full horror of my situation suddenly flashed over me. I must go on, trusting to that thin, unstable cord, balancing myself above the gulf. There was no other way, no retreat, no means of escape. I do not know now how the act was accomplished; it is hardly a memory, except as some wild delirium of sleep haunts one when they awake. Inch by inch I crept, hand encroaching on hand, foot pressing against foot, every slightest movement an inexpressible agony—then I gripped the support of wood once more, and clung to it as with the grasp of death.

I clung there until my mind came back, until I felt the return of strength to my body, and I could look down through the moonlight without reeling dizzily. The blind was strong, firmly braced, and I felt safe in its protection. But what about the window? Beyond, I supposed, it should be locked, or the room into which I opened occupied? I could not continue to cling there in uncertainty; I must learn the truth—assure myself that I had not passed through all this tense agony in vain.

I moved slowly, barely an inch at a time, each advancing foot feeling for support, but more confident now because of the grasp of my fingers on the upper wood. The window was closed, but dark and grimy looking as though the room within had been long unoccupied. Its very appearance gave me courage. I balanced myself on the precarious footing of the stone clinging sensationally to the cord, close to the iron hinge of the blind, which my right endeavored to raise the sash. At first I believed the window firmly fastened down—the suspicion leaving me numb with fear—but the rusty, reckless tugging loosened its hold, and enabled me to shove up the sash little by little, until finally the opening became sufficient for me to squeeze through. I felt as though I had returned from the dead, so nervous a reaction so great that I lay for a moment on the floor where I had fallen, unable to move. I knew I was alone in the space untenanted, the walls as bare as in that other room in which I had fled. I knew this, and in my exhaustion cared to know no more.

Then I staggered to my knees, and with opened eyes stared curiously about, gathering my wits together. There was nothing to fear, not in the four walls. I tried the door, and it opened silently, permitting me to peer out into a narrow dark hallway, unlurked. I could not discern the top of a flight of stairs leading down to the story below. I slipped out, and closed the door softly behind me, being plunged instantly into funereal blackness.

I groped a way forward toward the stairs, guided by a hand against the wall, until the touch of the upper rail assured me of my position. A narrow strip of carpeting—rug I took it to be from the feeling—extended down the center of the stairs, sufficient to muffle any footsteps, and I paused a moment listening for the slightest noise amid the darkness beneath. All remained still and mysterious; so that I drew forth my shoes from a coat pocket and slipped them on.

Twice the boards creaked ominously under my tread, sounding terrific in that silence, and causing me to hang in suspense over the banister rail, holding my breath lest I be discovered. At last I attained the wider space at the bottom, and sought blindly to explore my surroundings. But for the carpet underfoot, and a small sofa encountered in a recess, I might have believed myself in a deserted house. I knew I was on the third floor, yet there was no curve in the banisters, showing a way to the next flight of stairs, nor could I find any door at my effort. As the result of blindly groping about, I lost all sense of direction and must have wandered into a side room through an undraped recess, for I suddenly brought up against a table, littered with papers and books.

Startled by this encounter into a realization that I was lost in a strange house at an unholy hour of the morning, and that the slightest misstep in that darkness might result in an alarm, I awaken every sleeper, for a few minutes I did not venture to move in any direction. Yet manifestly I could not remain there indefinitely, and so, blindly choosing a course, I set forth, feeling a way cautiously forward until I first ran into a chair, and then struck one hand against a side wall. I followed this latter as best I could, inspired by the thought that if I continued this course long enough I must attain the opening through which I had entered the room. On the way my hands felt the outlines of a closed door, and, in aimlessly groping about, encountered a key in the lock. It was so inserted as to be extracted at the touch of my fingers and instantly a tiny ray of light shot forth through the vacated hole. It was such a relief in the heart of that darkness as to cause me to quickly bend down and endeavor to view the scene within. It was evidently a chamber of some size, and well furnished, rather dimly illuminated by a single shaded electric globe, a handsome green rug on the floor, and numerous pictures hung about the walls. I could perceive the outlines of a bed at one side, barely within the range of the vision, and opposite this an ornate dresser, with three mirrors. But what my eyes rested upon with greater interest was a luxurious leather couch beside the further wall on which a woman rested, with some sort of covering draped about her. She lay with face toward the wall, motionless, and to all appearances sound asleep.

The Sleeper Was Marie Gessler!

To arouse her was the last thing I desired, and I would have slipped the key back into the lock, and stolen silently along in the darkness, had she not suddenly stirred, flinging out one hand as though in fear of some dream, and turned partially, so that her face became clearly visible. The sleeper was Marie Gessler! For a moment I could scarcely credit the discovery; yet there could be no mistake. I remembered too well every characteristic of the girl, to be deceived.

Yet what house was this that she should be here? How did it happen that we were at the same place? Had she come voluntarily; or a prisoner? Had she been tricked into coming? or brought by force? and was she held there helpless to escape? I tried the door softly—it was locked. This, coupled with the fact that the key was upon the outside, served to answer the main question. However she came, she was now being held a prisoner. We must both be in the same hands, in the unscrupulous grasp of this desperate gang of criminals, determined to gain from us at any cost the secret we were supposed to share. I hesitated, but for only a moment, debating with myself the best course to pursue. Should I endeavor to escape from the house alone, and then return to her rescue with help? or face the greater danger of attempting to take her with me? The former move involved exposure of her whole connection with the affair, and I was afraid to take upon myself the responsibility. I knew not who she was, or why she had become involved in this mesh of crime. I feared Harris' knowledge, the evidence he might disclose, and what his passion for revenge might drive him to do, if he once found his game decisively blocked. It would be better for me to tell her all first and then act at her direction.

I reinserted the key in the lock noiselessly, shot back the bolt and opened the door, stepping quickly within to instantly shut out the glare of light. It seemed to me this was accomplished in utter silence, but, as the door latched behind me, she was upon her feet, plainly startled by the intrusion.

"Who are you? What does this mean?—why, Mr. Severn!"

"Yes," I responded quickly, yet making no effort to advance, "you have nothing to fear; only do not speak loudly."

"But please explain. I—I am not afraid of you, of course, but how do you happen to be here?"

"Perhaps you will permit me to ask a question first, which may sound ridiculous enough—where am I?"

"You do not know that even? I can at least answer with certainty," her composure returning; "you are at 247 Le Compte street."

"Waldron's house; that possibility never occurred to me. Sounds strange, doesn't it? But the truth is I was brought here unconscious."

"You were attacked?"

"Slugged in Costigan's saloon," I explained shortly. "It took three of them to do it, but they did a good job. That must have been about midnight. What time is it now?"

"It is after four; who are they?"

"Harris, Waldron and Costigan—some combination."

"But why should they slug you, Mr. Severn?"

"Simply because of my connection with the mysterious Miss Gessler," I explained. "Harris had chosen to associate us together, believing we know who murdered and robbed Alva, and where the spoils are hidden. They endeavored first to put me through the third degree, and when I refused to squeal—as you know simply because I possessed no knowledge to communicate—they resorted to force, and here I am."

Her eyes, wide open, questioning, were upon my face.

"They—they asked you about me? Why should they suppose you know anything?"

"Largely because we were together at Perond's, I presume. Harris claims to know you—who you are. Is that true?"

"It may be," she admitted. "What has happened tonight almost convinces me. I came here willingly, only to find myself a prisoner. Sarah Waldron telephoned me that she was ill, and needed me. I have known her ever since I was a girl; we were from the same town, so really I thought nothing unusual of her call. I have seen no one here since I came—no men. I mean—and did not remove my clothes, in anticipation of being called."

"She claimed to be here alone?"

"There are roomers on the floor below, but I met none."

"But I found your door locked," I insisted.

"That is very strange. I heard nothing. Perhaps if you will explain what they asked you, we may come to some understanding of what this all means. Does Harris accuse me of the robbery?"

"Yes and of the murder. The way he tells it the thing does sound rather ugly," I confessed regretfully, but believing the time had arrived for plain speech between us. "At least I was in no position to contravert his claims."

"You imply you suspect me also of this crime?"

"No, not that! I have given you my faith; but it has been given blindly. You have refused me your confidence. I do not even know your name, your place of residence, how you became involved in this cordon. You must acknowledge I am badly handicapped when it comes to attempting your defense."

"You have been very true, very kind," she admitted, and extended her hand. "You must know how greatly I appreciate such faithfulness, Mr. Severn. But tell me what Harris has to offer in proof against me. If all this be true, we cannot waste time here in talk."

CHAPTER XII.

At the Foot of the Stairs

"No, it will soon be morning, and all way of escape blocked. He is willing to swear that you agreed to permit Alva to drive you downtown, and that you actually departed to do so. This can perhaps be answered by the testimony of Krantz, if he can be got on the witness stand, as you have told me he accompanied you on a street car."

"While is true."

"I accept your word, of course, but Harris does not, and I must confess he has some evidence to cause suspicion."

"You say that!"

"I must, to be perfectly honest. I will even confess there have been times when I doubted. Let me tell you—Alva was undoubtedly killed with a dagger hatpin, exactly like that one in your hat there," and I pointed to it on the dresser.

Her eyes turned that way in an expression of startled surprise. "Killed with a hatpin like that of mine?"

"Yes, there is no doubt as to the nature of the weapon. I know more about that than Harris, even."

"How are you so sure a hatpin was the weapon used? The police reports say nothing like that."

"They do not know; I do. The truth is, I was the first to discover the murder. I stood to you my conversation with Harris, after all others had left the foundry. We must have been there alone for an hour. When we left we separated, believing this to be safe, and I walked down Gans street alone in the rain. Some blocks below the foundry I came upon this car, bumped up against the curb, and apparently abandoned. The rear door stood wide open, and I looked inside, and felt about, merely from curiosity. My fingers touched something lying on the floor, and, when I drew it out, and looked at it in the light of a distant street-lamp, I discovered it to be a dagger hatpin, discolored with blood."

She stared at me in horror.

"Like that one there?"

"Exactly like it. I had seen the one in your hat, and remembered."

"You thought it must be mine? That—that I had murdered him?"

"I hardly believe I thought at all. But I investigated the front end, and found Alva's body hanging over the wheel, with a gash in the back of his coat sticky with blood. Then I knew."

"Knew what?"

"How the man had been killed. I believed then you were with him alone; I had reason to, for I overheard his invitation, and your answer. I recognized the weapon as one you had in your possession. My first thought was that it would utterly condemn you if ever found."

"And, even then, you sought to protect me? You cared enough for that?"

"I hardly know; it must have been fine enough. I scarcely doubted but what it was your act—only I persuaded myself that the man must have attacked you, and that you struck in self-defense. I would not believe you guilty of deliberate murder. I meant to give you a chance; so I took the weapon away with me."

She drew a long breath.

"No one saw you?"

"Not a soul; the street was absolutely deserted. I wiped off the blood, and hid the knife in my pocket until I reached the hotel; then I concealed it at the bottom of my valise."

"And it is still there?"

"No; something led Harris to suspect I was not Daly, and he set out to investigate. He had my telephone number, and easily located both hotel and room. Waiting until I left the key, he entered, and went through the valise in search of anything he could find. He came upon the dagger hatpin, remembered that you had just such a one in your hat that night, and instantly jumped to the conclusion, as he had seen the wound, that this was the weapon of murder. He believes we were working together, and this was why I had concealed the knife."

"And you? you believed that?"

"I believed in you," I said earnestly. "At first I thought it must be you; then I saw that pin in your hat again, and knew I had one just like it hidden at the hotel. This gave me new hope, until I returned and discovered my valise slit open, and the dagger gone. I knew of no one who would do such an act—or had occasion—except you, in an effort to destroy evidence.

"Then later, when that was cleared up by Harris acknowledging that he was the one who got the pin, I told him about your having your own in your hat at Perond's. He only laughed, and said you were smart enough to buy another, as soon as the first was found missing; that doubtless there were plenty to be had."

"He's right; there are. At least I know of one shop on lower Broadway where they are for sale." She stopped suddenly, with a peculiar gesture. "Why, now I think of it, Sarah Waldron has such an exactly like mine; I bought it for her."

"Ivan Waldron's wife?"

"Of course; that's rather odd, isn't it?"

He opens up a line of thought, anyway. Could you find out, do you suppose, if she has it still? What does she know about her husband?"

The girl laughed softly.

"Know! Less even than I do, imagine. He doesn't show up here oftener than once in six months, and Sarah gets nothing from him. She wouldn't know—why?"

"Because, after all, it might be the Russian; if it was he would have to lie to Harris, and pretend to know nothing. You heard how those two talked at Perond's. What did you make of it?"

She drew her eyes together, leaving the marks of a frown on her forehead.

"That they had planned together to rob Alva; that Waldron was to be hidden somewhere outside, and was to wait for Harris to signal him that the money had been paid to him."

"Exactly; Harris failed to learn that the money changed hands, and consequently did not signal. But Waldron, nevertheless, was outside waiting; had no doubt spotted Alva's machine, and was ready to act. The one thing we do not know is—did Alva start home alone; or did one of the men accompany him? If the latter supposition is true then that fellow must have committed the murder, with Waldron a possible accomplice after the crime. If not true, then the only other solution is that Alva picked Waldron up for companionship. Were they acquainted at all?"

"I think so, but am not sure; you said Waldron first reported this chance t Harris."

"So he did; then it is quite possible the two knew each other. That would make it easy for the Russian to ask a ride. Whoever struck the blow was in the rear seat. This theory fits in all right with his actions toward Harris."

What do you mean to do?"

"Shadow Waldron; he is sure to expose himself sooner or later. We must get away from here, out of the hands of these fellows. Could you find your way to the stairs in the dark?"

"Yes. I have been here often."

"Then I am going to turn out this light before opening the door."

She led the way confidently enough, moving silently along the wall, I keeping close so as to touch her. A few steps brought us forth into the hall at the head of a flight of stairs leading downward. My fingers gripped the banisters, while she stood aside to let me pass.

"You better go ahead now; the next flight is directly beyond this, and ends at the street door."

"You will follow?"

"Of course; I shall keep right behind you."

We went down step by step, not a stair creaking, or a sound louder than our own breathing. I reached the last step, warned by the newel post, and felt ahead with one groping foot to assure myself of the level beyond. Her fingers grasped my sleeve, and lips almost at my ear, whispered a barely audible warning.

"Took to the right! What is that?"

It was a dull, red glow, a mere pinprick in the black curtain, yet it seemed to change in brilliancy, like an evil eye winking at us out of the dark. There was something uncanny about the thing, yielding me no suggestion as to what it could be, yet frightening by its baleful gleam at such a time and place. Then there was borne to my nostrils the faint odor of tobacco smoke; it must be a man sitting there smoking; what we saw was the red tip of his cigar.

Could we slip by unheard? I doubted it, yet whatever happened, one of us, at least, must escape from the house before any alarm was sounded. There was but one chance left—for her to slip silently down that other flight of stairs to the street door, while I remained behind to protect her flight. If there was no alarm, no notice taken of her passage, possibly I might venture to follow without being overheard; but she must go first, her step was light, and she was more sure of the way. Besides, I could block pursuit, by a fight if necessary, and thus give her ample time in which to unchain and open that front door. Once without, these fellows would never follow. I put my lips close against the girl's ear.

"It is a guard there smoking. Don't try to answer, but do exactly as I say. One of us, at least, must get out; you stand the better chance, with my remaining behind to hold these fellows back if there should be any alarm. If there is not, I'll follow. Do you understand?—answer with your hand."

I felt the firm pressure of her fingers in quick response.

"The fellow evidently hasn't heard anything yet—you better go."

I felt her creep past me without a sound, her hand slipping from my grasp as her foot touched the level floor of the hall. She was invisible, no longer even a shadow in the black gloom. Then suddenly from somewhere a chain clanked faintly; the ear could not determine from what direction the sound came, yet it was clear enough to be heard plainly. The man stood still, evidently listening; I lost sight of the red glow, as though he had removed the cigar from between his lips, and slowly straightened myself up, braced for any emergency. She had reached the outside door, and was preparing to open it. For an instant nothing happened. Then the sharp, resounding click of a heavy lock echoed up from beneath, like the tap of a hammer.

The fellow snapped on the electricity, flooding the large hall, and, uttering a gruff oath, started forward. We met face to face. There was nothing else for it but to fight it out. If I ran the act would only expose her before she could distance pursuit; besides that first glimpse had revealed my antagonist, and I was glad—it was "Gentleman George"! He knew me almost at the same instant, spitting out a curse as he reached back for his gun.

"You, hey! How the h—l did you get down here?"

But I was quicker, the move ready. Stepping the weak, and twisting the arm back until the torture caused him to drop the weapon, as we struggled back across the width of the hall. We were both weaponless, relying only on the efficacy of bare hands, but he turned into a savage, a dangerous fighter who cared only to disable his opponent in any way possible. It was like battling with a wild cat, infuriated, crazed with hate and fear. And for the moment the fellow had me, driving me back against the rail, helpless before the fierceness of his assault.

Some one was coming. I could hear a voice, and, flying steps on the stairs; then a woman's scream somewhere above. I broke away, getting a grip on his throat, and feeling my feet firm on the floor. He could see what I couldn't, and found voice in spite of my throttling.

"It's that d—d skunk, Severn, got out. Hit him, Ivan! Smash in, I've got the guy—quick now!"

FASHIONS IN BRIEF

The bateau necklines and other shallow decollctes are preferred to the extremes just now.

Short capes have stole collars of fur, and are edged with narrow black silk fringe.

An uneven line at the hem may be very attractively developed by a sash tied so that one end hangs well below the skirt hem proper.

The new handbags for spring must be flat and thin and ornamented with onyx, karcasite or jewels, whether they be of silks, moires, velvets, faille or satin.

Clusters of chenille dots on the tight veils will take one of the leading parts among the swellings in the spring. In the duster effects there will be several contrasting colors.

A novelty apron that has been especially featured at a smart New York shop is made of suede cut in stripes that are studded with steel beads, forming a pattern. This novelty is being shown as the successor to silk fringe, which has been so extensively used as dress trimming.

COMPLETELY FREE OF CONSTIPATION

Tried for Years to Find Relief

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" GAVE IT

Chronic Constipation or insufficient action of the bowels, is one of the great causes of disease. Some authorities even claim that Constipation cannot be permanently corrected. This is a great mistake, because here is the proof that constipation can be cured and the bowels made to act regularly and naturally.

YARMOUTH, N.S.

"For years, I was troubled with Constipation, and had to take laxatives and purgatives all the time. If I neglected to take these, the bowels would refuse to do their work.

About two years ago, a friend advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives", which I did. The first box helped me so much that I obtained further supplies of the remedy and continued the treatment. After using about eight boxes, my bowels were able to perform their particular function without aid.

The relief in my case has been lasting, as up to date, I have never had any further trouble. I can recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to all suffering as I did and I am sure they will derive equal benefit".

Locate Bed So as to Derive Fullest Benefit From Sun.

In the production of tobacco a plentiful supply of early, vigorous plants determines to a great extent the degree of success attained; therefore, careful preparation of the seed-bed is of paramount importance.

A good bed should be located on well drained soil which is in a good state of fertility and which is free subjecting any vegetable matter in advanced stages of decay. It should be so situated as to derive the fullest benefit from the sun, and, if possible, on the south side of some building or other obstruction to serve as a windbreak.

The type of bed best suited to the average grower is the semi-hot bed. This is made by digging out a trench eight inches deep and any width desired; straw, cornstalks or any similar material is then packed into the trench to a depth of six inches and about five inches of soil is put on top of the straw. The bed is then ready for sterilization. It has been found, through six years' experiments, that the semi-hot bed not only produces plants on an average of two weeks earlier than the cold bed, similarly covered, but it also produces from 3,000 to 6,000 more plants per hundred square feet of bed during the growing season.

Steaming for 30 minutes at 100 pounds pressure, on the boiler, has proven to be the most efficient method for sterilizing. By steaming practically all weeds and plants diseases are eradicated, and steamed soil usually produces earlier plants than unsteamed. Before steaming the soil should be thoroughly loosened and pulverized, and it is best to steam a short while before seeding.

The frames should be placed around the bed immediately after sterilizing and the bed well covered to prevent the blowing in of weed seed, diseased soil, etc. It is very important to have the frames tight and well banked around the bottom to keep out the cold winds.

The beds should be seeded between April 1st and 15th, if possible, with well cleaned, acclimatized seed which has been tested. With seed testing around 85 per cent. one-seventh of an ounce (a slightly heaping teaspoonful) of the Burley varieties and slightly less of the flue-cured varieties per 100 square feet of bed is sufficient. The seed should be gown dry with dry sifted wood ashes as a carrier. After seeding the bed should be well firmed and the seed covered by tamping with a board and then kept nicely moist at all times until the plants become quite large.

Things to Remember.

Remember that it pays to feed apparently expensive feeds to small chicks when the quantity consumed is comparatively small if by this means you keep them alive and growing.

Remember that if your chicks are early hatched and good stock, you are building winter egg machines, and you will be amply repaid for your care and trouble.

Remember to keep grit, shell, charcoal, milk, (sour preferred) and water before the chicks at all times. Never feed sour and sweet milk alternately.

Remember to guard against mildew or mould in any form, either in the food or in the litter.

Sawdust Ration.

From an experiment station in Wisconsin comes the report, quoted in the Scientific American, that after a long continued diet consisting of one-fourth part of white pine sawdust in their ration cows showed no visible change in their weight or milk production.

Hoactzin.

The hoactzin is a bird with four feet which was discovered along the Amazon river in South America. Two of its feet serve as hands and the young birds are able to climb about with remarkable agility.

Telephones.

In all the world there were only 778 telephones in use forty-three years ago. There were 12,000,000 in the United States alone in 1918.

TEST YOUR SEED CORN

Give Your Seed a Careful Germination Test—It Should Run 95 Per Cent—The Mulberry In Ontario—Home-made Spray for Flies.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Two ears of corn may be used to plant two rows side by side. The seed may weigh the same and look the same, but the results in plant development and yield is frequently vastly different. Two stalks may stand together in the same hill, enjoying similar conditions for growth and development. One may produce a good ear while the other produces an inferior nubbin.

Seed With Good Vitality a Necessity.

The difference is traceable to the seed. Good vital seed from select stock will generally give strong plants and full ears. Unselected seed will give a few good plants and many medium or barren plants. Enormous loss and waste would be prevented each year if care were exercised by all purchasers of seed corn. A few hills missed in each row, a few weak or barren plants distributed over the corn field, reduces or eliminates all opportunity for profit. The interest, taxes and wages have to be paid in full no matter what the crop is, and the more frequent the missed spaces, barren stalks and weak stalks in the corn field the less there is to pay with.

Give the Seed a Germination Test.

All seed corn should be given a germination test before planting. One poor seed ear going into the planter means a waste in land, and labor that is best expressed by one thousand weak or worthless stalks. The corn grower can't afford to neglect the quality of the seed he sows.

Plant one hundred seeds two or three weeks in advance of the regular corn planting date, using a box of moist sand placed in a warm window as a germinator. Count the strong plants at the end of ten days; there should be at least 95 of them. If the test shows any weakness discard all the seed and secure another supply with a guaranteed germination test.—L. Stevenson, Secretary, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

Notes.

The practice of ensiling crops was introduced in America by Dr. Manly Miles in 1875.

Hotbeds are useful for starting early vegetables and flowers. Radishes, lettuce and onions may be had much earlier from frames than outside, and the extra labor does not amount to much.

STREAMS FURNISH POWER.

Many farmers unknowingly have on their farms a source of power that could be put to work at very little expense and could be made to fill many farm and domestic needs. This is the stream, large or small, that now runs away in wasted energy. Particularly at this time, when there is a great shortage of labor on the farms, it is desirable that the farmers take advantage of every possible means of utilizing power. Electricity, too, for farm and domestic uses benefits the farmer's wife as much as it does the farmer himself, for it relieves her of much of the drudgery of housework and adds greatly to the comfort of farm life.

The farmer's needs go hand in hand with those of the wife, so, in considering the size of the power plant to be installed, he should include her requirements as well as his own. The desirability of a dependable, convenient and cheap supply of electric current for use for light and power purposes on country places is so manifest that one is justified usually in going to some lengths to secure it. It is advisable to put in a plant somewhat larger than the needs of the moment require. An additional horsepower or two will not greatly change the first cost, while use will always be found for any original excess.

A stream 10 feet wide with an average depth of two feet and flowing at the rate of two feet a second under a head of five feet is capable of supplying over 10 horsepower, according to estimates made by engineers of the division of rural engineering, that have been investigating the utilization of farm streams as sources of energy for generating electricity. Ten horsepower is equivalent to about 7½ kilowatts, which is sufficient electricity for all lighting on the average farmstead and for operating motors for many of the usual needs for power, such as the washing machine, milking machine, separator, churn, feed grinder, fanning mill, etc. If the head could be made 10 feet instead of five, the horsepower could be doubled. Or if the stream were twice as wide or twice as deep with but a five-foot head the result would be the same.

The minimum conditions under which an installation should be considered are, roughly, a flow of 100 gallons per minute and a head of 10 feet, or the equivalent. Under these conditions the amount of electricity generated continuously is small, but by permitting the plant to run continuously and storing the current generated in storage batteries, a supply may be always at hand for the lighting and small power requirements of the farm.

A plant capable of furnishing current for as many as 50 to 100 lights for the house, barn, outbuildings, yard and drives; providing ample current for washing, ironing, vacuum cleaning, electric fans, toasters, percolators, hot plates, sewing machine, etc., for all cooking, heating of water and the house in the coldest weather, as well as for operating motors for all the various farming operations even during threshing time, necessarily must be considered the exception. On the other hand, the smallest plant which is worthy of consideration is one having a capacity of but eight to ten lights.

Between these two extremes, there exist to-day on our farms the means of developing thousands of plants large enough to supply between five and ten horsepower during all seasons of the year. It will be found that these plants will fill the needs of the average farm and provide an excess for emergencies. The cost may be considered well within the reach of thousands of owners to-day.

A Convincing Argument.

"What's this?" said John Smith, as he came upon his wife's new sewing machine knee deep in a snow drift.

"Oh, I just put it out there to keep your mower company," replied his wife.

Cut the first crop of alfalfa when starting to bloom.

The value of the motor truck as an aid in marketing farm products is now well established. In bringing this about improved roads have been an essential factor.

INJURY BY CHINCH BUGS.

Department Urges Steps Be Taken to Check Infestation.

The chinch bug has not yet invaded Canada in large numbers, but it has done so much harm to corn crops in the United States that Canadians must be careful.

The chinch bugs spend the winter in clumps of bunch grass and under dead leaves and rubbish. In the spring they emerge and fly to fields of young wheat, where they lay their eggs on the root tops and stems.

When the wheat commences to ripen and dry, the young bugs leave the wheat fields in armies and walk—for most of them cannot fly—to the cornfields, where they do the greatest damage.

The fact that they make the migration from the wheat to the corn by walking gives the farmer his opportunity to check the invasion by pouring road oil along the bottom of a shallow furrow dug across the line of march. Deep holes should be dug every 25 feet along the furrow on the side nearest the wheat to trap the bugs.

Corn already infested may be sprayed with kerosene emulsion along the first rows to prevent the bugs from going farther. Some corn will be injured by the spray, but the balance will be safe from the bug.

As a preventive measure, burn all trash and dried grasses, especially such as grow in clumps like "broom sedge" during early winter or early spring. Roadsides and pastures should receive most thorough treatment of this character.

Guernsey Records.

The advantage to the owner of Guernsey cows in having his animals carry an Advanced Register record is shown in the results of 28 sales held in the United States during 1921. A study of the prices secured showed that 117 Advanced Register females brought an average of $617.94 cents, while 231 females without A.R. records but having A.R. dams brought an average of $417.66. Compared with the foregoing, 761 females without A.R. records and without A.R. dams made a decidedly low price, namely an average of $295.96. Two bulls with A.R. progeny made an average price of $426.50; 62 bulls with A.R. dams averaged $340.05, and 108 bulls without A.R. dams made only $205.04.

The Advanced Register rules require, regular tests every month, and also automatic re-tests within fifteen days if any regular inspection shows a yield of butter fat above certain standards. In order to further safeguard the work, the American Guernsey Cattle Club has adopted a policy of conducting special official tests in case the production is especially high.

Treating Potato Seed.

Many potato growers are interested in the hot formaldehyde method of treating potato seed because it saves time, is less poisonous than corrosive sublimate, does not corrode metals, and is effective for both scab and rhizoctonia.

The solution is made by mixing two pints of 40 per cent. formaldehyde to 30 gallons of water. This is heated to a temperature between 118 degrees F. to 122 degrees F. The potatoes are dipped in the solution for two minutes and then dumped in a pile and covered with a canvas cover or sacks for one hour. They can then be dried cut and planted immediately. Formaldehyde when used without heating will not control rhizoctonia and requires one and a half hours soaking for best results in control of scab.

Quarantine New Birds.

Newly purchased breeding stock should always be quarantined for several days after arrival. The birds may have been in perfect health upon delivery at the railroad station of their previous owner, but the exposure that frequently occurs during transit is quite apt to cause diseased conditions that might menace the health of the entire home flock.

Hats of Felt.

Hats of felt, bound with a wire ribbon and pressed into ridges or folds around the top of the crown, are particularly smart. They come in all shades of tan and brown and in black and dark blue. There are two ways of trimming them. One is to use ostrich and one is to use a cockade, bow or band of ribbon. The ribbon, of course, preserves the tailored effect of the hat. The ostrich makes it into a more elaborate hat for afternoon dress wear.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

A young man who practiced medicine in Pennsylvania became famous and was called in consultation in many towns and cities because of his success in the treatment of disease. This was Dr. Pierce, who finally made up his mind to place some of his medicines before the public, and moving to Buffalo, N. Y., put up what he called his "Favorite Prescription," and placed it with the druggists everywhere.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has long been recognized as a tonic for diseases peculiar to womankind. After suffering pain, feeling nervous, dizzy, weak and dragged-down by weaknesses of her sex—a woman is quickly restored to health by its use. Thousands of women testify that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has entirely eradicated their distressing ailments.

More recently that wonderful discovery of Dr. Pierce's, called Anuric (for kidneys and backache), has been successfully used by many thousands who write Dr. Pierce of the benefits received—that their backache, rheumatism, and other symptoms of uric acid deposits in joints or muscles have been completely conquered by its use.

Send 10c to Dr. Pierce's Laboratory in Bridgeburg, Ont., for trial package of any of his remedies.

JET IN HEADDRESS

Pearls Also Used to Add to Decorations for the Hair.

Bracelet Encircles Arm at Wrist and Above Elbow, Connected by String of Beads.

Jet used singly or combined with pearls makes up some of the most striking combs and headdresses, either seen in the shops or worn by smart Parisiennes, observes a fashion writer. A jet comb noticed recently was set with two rows of pearls, the upper row two sizes larger than the lower. The touch of chic, however, lay in the fact that the comb reached almost from ear to ear, giving a wonderful effect against the dark red hair on which it was worn.

A headdress made entirely from jet consists of a narrow band worn low on the forehead and having five circular ornaments overlapping each other at the front. At either side are jet rings, which are as large as bracelets and which give the effect of mammoth earrings. Accompanying this headdress is a pair of jet bracelets, one encircling the arm at the wrist and the other above the elbow, and both connected by a string of jet beads. The prematurely white-haired woman who wore these affected a one-piece dress of white velvet, the slight gathers across the front held in at either side with a jet ornament.

A new bracelet made large enough to wear just below the shoulder is of pearls strung on silver and has a fringe of pearl beads which falls over the arm. This fringe is sometimes of uniform length and at other times has pointed scallops. This fringe idea is carried out in bracelets of pearls combined with onyx, thus making a much more striking and really smarter bracelet than the pearls alone.

THE STRIKING WHITE SERGE

This winsome costume of white serge is trimmed with black and white braid and black wool fringe. The over ready cape which reaches almost to the hem of the skirt is popular at Southern resorts. The white hat completes the outfit.

Oldest English Clock.

The oldest English-made clock known is in the tower of the palace at Hampton Court, where it was placed in 1551. It was so complete that it showed the motions of several of the planets, in addition to measuring the time. Part of the original mechanism is still in place.

Tria' by jury is said to have existed in 2,000 B.C.

50,000 More
Starving Russian Children

have been alloted to the Save the Children Fund workers in the famine area about Saratov, by the All-British Committee.

At present, the generosity of the Canadian people has enabled the Canadian Committee of the Save the Children Fund to provide sufficient food for 75,000 chidren in Russia, who would otherwise have died from starvation.

Now that the Russian Relief Fund (including the British Red Cross), the Friend's Relief Mission and the British and Canadian Save the Children Funds have been united under the direction of Sir Benjamin Robertson, more work is being undertaken and there is a corresponding increase in the demand for funds.

There is absolutely no hope that Russian children can be helped by Russia itself, until the harvest which comes at the end of August. So it is imperative that money and food continue to be sent through the Canadian and British Organizations right through the summer.

Will you give something?

25c. will feed a child for a week. $1. will ensure sufficient food for one child for a month. $500. will establish a kitchen in the famine district and feed 100 children until the next harvest.

Cheques and money orders may be forwarded through the local committee, your bank or sent direct to Sir George Burn, Treasurer, Save the Children Fund, Elgin Building, Ottawa.

All subscriptions are expended in Canada on Canadian Foodstuffs.

DUNLOP
CORD TIRES FABRIC

Making "Mile-ionaires"

These are great days for the motor car user—in a tire sense. Your dollar never before bought as much. Your speedometer never before registered as much. Your repair kit never was as idle. All because Dunlop Cord Tires came and ushered in a new era. Five years ago you paid half as much again for the same size tire; ten years ago you paid twice as much. Prices have been tumbling. Quality has been mounting. One time we thought 3,500 was mileage to boast of; to-day we may run into half a dozen "25,000 Milers" in a forenoon. "Dunlop did it," says one enthusiast. The "Two Hands" are making us Mile-ionaires," says another, and so on.

The Sign "Mileage Wanted" is now changed to "Mileage Supplied"—use Dunlop Cords.

It's gone; and you hate to tell.

The funeral of the late Harold Parker, only son of Mrs. M. E. Parker, Toronto, was held in St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Napanee, on Thursday last. Mr. Parker, who was receiving teller in a Toronto branch of the Bank of Montreal, passed away at the home of his mother in Toronto, after but a few day's illness from quinsy, followed by septic poisoning. He lived in Napanee for a number of years and during the past few years spent his holidays the guest of his cousin, Mrs. B. F. Davy at their summer home. The head office of the Bank of Montreal sent Mrs. Parker a very kind message of sympathy, expressing regret at the early death of so promising a young man. Numerous floral tokens also testified to the deceased's popularity and world. The bearers at the funeral were Messrs. Reg. Douglas, W. Barrett, D. Doller, F. Carter, H. E. Boyle and R. McAulay.
